T'OTHER DAN BEARD A BOTHER

HIS BILLS AND LOVE LETTERS COME TO THE ARTIST.

Artist Sued for Damages Because t'Other Used a Rubber Stamp-T'Other Died. and Newspapers Buried the Artist -Now t'Other Has Come to Life.

Dan Beard, the artist, sat at 11:30 P. M. on Monday on the roof of the porch of his Flushing, L. I., home and swung his scantily clad legs in the early morning breeze.

"No," he eaid, "I'm not the chap in Philadelphia that you say was mistaken for me to-day, but this is not the first time the have heard of that other Dan Beard, ad I wish I was sure that it would be the las-

At this point Mr. Beard apparently became conscious of the unconventionalis of his attire and the keenness of the pril zephyrs. He had taken to the roof a the first place as a point of vantage from hich to observe the intruder who had ring his bell at an ungodly hour, for Flusing, of 11:30. Now, he de erted the roof ad told the rest of the story in the stugo down

"This other Dan Beard," he sid, "first came to my notice several yearyago when I received a letter signed Dan Beard, and mailed in New York, which read:
"Have arrived in the city. Do you think that the town is large cough to hold two Dan Beards.' " "I thought it a joke at the ime and wrote back saying that there sould be room enough if my namesake behved himself. "At that time I had no studio in the Puck Building, and it was only a few days later that on returning from lunch I found a queer looking chap lynging around my door, and trying to pep in through the cracks. I clapped hit on the shoulder and asked what he wated, expecting to see him jump and los guilty, but instead he turned around a cool as you please and said: 'I am loking for Mr. Beard.' 'Well I am that peson.' I responded and thereupon he preshted me with a bill for $75 for jewelry purhased in St. Louis.

"I turned on the young man and fixed him with my ey, 'Iwon't pay it,' I said.
'It's outlawed; fr I haven't been in St. Louis for over twenty years.' Then I gently explains that he had made several mistakes and tat it is better to walk downstairs than tobe thrown down. He took that he was asked the other day if he were related to Dan Beard. When he replied that Dan Beard was his uncle the ques-tioner tried in vain to hide a smile. My nephew became rather angry and demanded an explanation.

"Well,' said his friend, 'your uncle has been drunk and raising hell around Philly for about a week now. You'd better look

Nothing happened on Monday in Philadelphia to the man who was taken to be the artist, except that he settled a difficulty of some kind not specified and thereby avoided further difficulty.
